WYETH'S DIALYSED IRON—This article possesses great advantages over every other ferruguious preparation heretofore introduced, as it is a solution of iron in as nearly as possible the form in which it exists in the blood. It is a preparation of invariable strength and purity, obtained by a process of dialysation, the iron being separated from its combinations by endosmosis, according to the law of diffusion of liquids. It has no styptic taste, does not blacken the teeth, disturb the stomach or constipate the bowels. It affords, therefore, the very best mode of administering iron. For sale by aug 16 E. S. TUESDAY EVENING, SEPT'R. 18.

falifornia's Petrified Forest. We started out, a merry party of twenty-five or twenty-six, one day last week, to visit that wonderful relie of a bygone age, the petrified forest near Calistoga. The site of the petrified forest is about 1000 feet above sea level, and lies in the same trend with the Geysers, Mount St. Helena, and the thermal springs of Calistoga. Geologically, it is one vast tufa bed, in which the trees lie as they were thrown, proba bly thousands of years ago, by some vast con-vulsion of nature. This tufa, I will say, for the benefit of the uninitiated in scientific lore, is a volcanie ash or einder; it is lava thrown up ward in a fiery mass and descending with rain. It is gray in color and granular in structure. Sometime it is found imbedded in the form of little globes or bembs. Ammonites found in the strata fix the event in the cretaceous period. The professor inclines to the opinion that it was pre glacial. The trees lie at five or six differ ent levels on the lower almost north and south, at the highest northeast and southwest. At the latter level the trees must have been buried under 80 or 100 feet of lava; at the lowest 500 feet. Their dip conforms to the dip of the tufa, and is at an argle of from 30 to 45 de grees. They are in tragments, many of which have been converted into charcoal, others into lignite, and others into beautiful specimens of lignite, and others into beautiful specimens of jet. Where the heart of a tree had decayed the cavity is filled with opala form of lustrous, unerystalized silies, containing water. Chalcadony, another from of silies, but clear and limpid, is found in other cavities. No top has been petrified, and only here and there a root. Many have been charted by ire. Some were broken after potrifaction had taken place, as there is no mark of selintering or bruising. What must petrifaction had taken place, as there is no mark of splintering or bruising. What must have been the giant force that followed their first destruction to have dealt this further blow? The majority of the trees are redwood, some few the madrons, and the limb of an oak has also been found. One of the first named is 11 feet in diameter and the part of the trunk still pre-ited it at the advent of the European, for he An fee Palace.

in diameter, and the part of the trunk still preserved is 65 feet in length. Another shows marks of having been hacked with an axe, probably made of obsidian, as all the pre-historic implements from this locality were made of this same substance, a volcanic rock, which appears in abundance all about. There is no mistaking the fact that the cutting was done before petrifac-tion began, as the cuts occur at different angles to the grain of the wood. The deduction is inevitable that man was in California before the birth of Mount St. Helena even, and also that he was a type superior to the people who inhab.

The ice palace of the Empress Anne, of Russia, erected at St. Petersburg in 1740, must have been a very great curiosity. It was, as it were, one solid block of ice, and of the following dimensions-length 56 feet, depth 18 feet, and height, including roof, 21 feet. The palisade was 87 feet in length and 36 in width, and the whole, iscluding pyramidal blocks at either end, made an ice front of 114 feet. The palace had windows, the paues of which were slabs of ice, transparent and smooth as glass. These windows were ornamented with transparencies, and illuminated at night. Six cannons, regularly bored and turned, made entirely of ice, carriages included, stood in front of this brilliant edifice of congealed water, from which quarter pound iron balls were fired, without bursting them. There were also mortars of ice, from which a shell of 80 lbs were discharged. The grounds were ornamented with dolphins, and an elephant of ice, spouting water. At night burning naptha was substituted for the water, and the effect is said to have been very singular, the appearance being that of a stream of fire. To make this part of the exhibition more remarkable, a man was placed within the figure, who from time to time, blew through certain pipes, so as to make a noise like the roaring of an elephant. On the right of the house, at about the same distance as the elephant, a both was built, made of round logs of ice, like the log table of Russia. "This bath," says an author, "was more than once actually heated and used!" The winter of 1749 was exceedingly cold, a fact which suggested to the Empress the feasibility of the ice value. It stood until the middle of March, when it began to melt—its ruins being taken to fill the ice-vanits of the imperial palace. But the Empress of Russia was not the only person who took advantage of the excessive cold of the year 1749. The same kind of a musement, though on an infinitely smaller scale, was taken by a German, named Von Meinert, who carved a large from at the gate of Holstein in Lubeck, seven feet in length, and he did it so well "that a skillful carver could hardly have done it efter on wood." The floor was surrounded by a bulwark of ice, on waich were released the expansion, a saidle; and a watch box, of fire. To make this part of the exhibition more surrounded by a bulwark of ice, on which were placed live cannons, a saidle and a watch box,
